

Reflection: Setting up experiences

Here are some reflections to help guide your practices when setting up experiences and activities in a service.

Why choose this activity? >

Think about why you are choosing to set up an activity. Often understanding why you are doing something can inspire you to try something different or be more creative.

< Who is the activity being set up for?

Think about who you are setting up for. Are you drawing on your experience and knowledge of child development or have other agendas taken over?

What has this set up achieved? >

Think about what you have set up. Reflect on how many of these attributes you have managed to achieve for the children and stakeholders at your service.
